

Traffic Stops: Data Analysis

Presented By: Akanksha Gavade, Addy O'Shea, Smritha Srinivasan

Our team

Smritha Srinivasan

Akanksha Gavade

Addy O'shea

Contents

Introduction
Data
Analysis & Key findings
Conclusion

20 Million

Motorists are pulled over every single year.
On average, over 50,000 drivers are pulled over every single day.

Are all traffic stops “routine”?

What kind of factors affect your chances of getting pulled over, and receive a citation?
Let's find out.

01

Introduction

Goal: Analyzing traffic stop data to ensure equitable policing.

Introduction

Who

Key stakeholders within Burlington's law enforcement, policymakers, and local community.

What

Data-driven insights regarding these traffic stops is essential to ensure impartial policing.

Introduction

Why

Fair and impartial policing is critical to build trust between law enforcement and the community.

Understanding traffic stops patterns allows us to identify any issues.

How

Analyzing the Stanford Open Policing data set to analyze traffic stop data in Burlington, VT.

Studying patterns and insights about variables like age, race and gender alongwith potential outcomes.

02

Data

Stanford Open Policing Project

Stanford Open Policing Project

Location

Burlington, VT

Data points

30,000+

Variables

5

Variables

Race

Categorical

Age

Numeric

Sex

Categorical

Type of Violation

Categorical

Outcome

Categorical

Methodology

Data pre-processing

Hypothesizing

Analysis

Visualizations

20 Million

Motorists are pulled over every single year.
On average, over 50,000 drivers are pulled over every single day.

03

ANALYSIS & FINDINGS

Stanford Open Policing Project

Visual #1

What is the Arrest Rate by Race and Sex?

Subject Sex

female male

Subject Sex

female male

RDS

section, describe all methods you used to analyze your nd why you chose your analysis methods.

Visual #2

Alcohol Related Violations by Age

WORDS

Visual #3

Distribution of Drivers Stopped by Age

WORDS

Next Steps

Limitations

WORDS

04 DISCUSSION & CONCLUSION

Stanford Open Policing Project

05

REFERENCES

Stanford Open Policing Project

